INTRODUCTION

A family is a social group consisting of people who are related by blood or by living together. Family is a small group based on marriage or birth. Its members are connected by unity of livelihood, mutual support and moral responsibility. Although family relations are considered a relatively independent phenomenon, existing social, economic, and ideological relations in society are determined and change under their influence. Accordingly, each society changes and establishes suitable family relations.

The family did not exist in the history of society. At the first stage of the primitive community system, when people lived in groups, the relations between the sexes did not have specific rules, and all men and women in the group were considered common spouses. In the course of historical development, sexual relations gradually began to be regulated. At first, relations between parents and children, and then between brothers and sisters were prohibited, and a group family appeared. Thanks to the state independence of Uzbekistan, the ancient national traditions and rituals of our people have been revived. These benefits play an important role in strengthening the family.

The family, which is an integral part of society, plays an important role not only in the development of every individual, but also in the development of every nation and people. There is no nation, nation or society that has not taken into account the problems and values of the family and its surroundings in the history of its development and in defining the development perspective. Emphasizing that the family has a special role in the development of any society and nation, we recall the following thoughts of Islam Abdug'anievich Karimov, the 1st President of the Republic of Uzbekistan: "In the formation and promotion of the unique spirituality of any nation, there is no doubt that the role and influence of the family is incomparable. Because the purest and purest feelings of a person, the first concepts and imaginations of life are first formed in the bosom of the family.

It is natural that the spiritual criteria and views that determine the child's character, nature and worldview - the foundations of sacred concepts such as goodness and goodness, nobility and kindness, honor and dignity - are settled in the family environment. A family is a small group of blood relatives based on marriage or the social lifestyle of its members, mutual moral responsibility and mutual support.

The family that exists in a humane democratic legal state is defined as follows: "The family is a natural and basic unit of society, and in the legal sense, it is the legal entity that results from the permanent upbringing of children in the form of marriage, kinship, adoption or other forms. It consists of a citizen's union aimed at developing and strengthening family relations based on the ideology of national independence, universal human values and oriental traditions, consisting of a circle of persons bound by rights and obligations.

MAIN PART

The family consists not only of parents and children, but also includes older generations (grandparents) and relatives. If the grandfather is the father of the father or mother, the grandmother is the mother of the father or mother. Relatives are united in the family in terms of consanguinity. Kinship is a biological and social phenomenon that represents the union of a group of several people belonging to the same generation and ancestor into a specific family.

"Once there was an old man and an old woman. They had smart and wise daughters..." This is how many fairy tales begin. Grandparents have been engaged in raising their grandchildren since ancient times. Because the father works from morning to night, and the mother is busy with household chores. Not much has changed even today. Even today, young parents, especially young parents who are studying as students, need the support of adults, that is, grandparents. Because when most student girls get married or student boys get married, their parents say: "If they have young children, we will not watch. We will raise their children ourselves", they take the responsibility on themselves. With this kind of support from adults, young parents study, work, and compete with their peers. Parents' meetings in kindergartens or schools can also be called grandparents' meetings. Because two-thirds of those who come to the meeting will definitely be grandparents.

So, is it good or bad that the child is under the care of the grandmother? How does such education affect the future of the child, the formation of his personality and abilities? Maybe mothers who give up their jobs in order to raise their children independently are doing the right thing?

Experts have determined the positive influence of grandmothers on child upbringing.

If you have noticed, a young mother or father bringing their child from kindergarten does not hear their child who is excited about something. Because his mind is busy with his daily chores, tomorrow's plans or some events happening in his office. Grandparents live in the same time and space as children. They live in the same time frame. The grandmother remembers well what her granddaughter recently told her, what kind of activities were held in the kindergarten, how she interacted with the children in the group. In this place, a mother is just interested in her child, while a grandmother sincerely cares for her grandchild.

Another advantage of a child raised by a grandmother is that he receives education from rich life experiences. Parents worry about their child's future and think that they can fully control their life, and they are mistaken. They want their children to have a bright future and try to educate them in their corrected options. That is, they see all their qualities in their grown-up children and do not see any of their shortcomings. In our children, especially in our first-born children, we create our ideal childhood. We try to make our dreams come true, we realize our personal ambitions, and we forget that the individuality of the child is not the plasticine that we hold in our hands. A child has the right to spend his childhood with his own mistakes, achievements, dreams and surprises.

Grandparents are much wiser in this regard. Usually their upbringing is based on the individuality of the child. Using the same methods for different children gives different results. Their rich experience unites them and what they have experienced in life. In families where parents are strict and demanding, grandparents are somewhat patient and flexible.

A grandmother's love for her grandson is boundless, of course. The grandmother loves her grandson not only because he behaves well, is a good boy, reads poems in front of guests, learns letters, but simply because he is there. Grandparents sharing their grandchild's interests and worries without limiting their time becomes such a magical vitamin for the child that, as a result, new creative aspects begin to open up in the child. Research has proven that creativity, originality of thinking is more observed in the behavior of a child raised by grandparents compared to his peers raised by parents.

One of the conditions for proper upbringing of children in the family is unity in education. It is necessary to have unity in handling, punishing, influencing the child in everything. Often what the child's mother or grandmother allows, the father forbids. Children find their own way between a demanding father and a less demanding mother and a grandmother who is not at all demanding. Seeing the disagreement between adults, children learn to be arrogant, deceitful, and flattery. Some parents are too kind to the child and become tyrannical, they perform all his tasks themselves, bear all his whims and stubbornness, as a result, the child grows up unloving and unloving. The fact that parents are the same for all their children is one of the important conditions of education, it leads to the fact that siblings are harmonious, kind to each other, consistent, the reputation of parents increases in the eyes of children, they learn to count with people, their teaches not to offend and to appreciate people.

The children of the same father and the same mother are not alike in character, parents love both the good and the bad children with the same love, knowing that the older one is great and the younger one in his own place. should be treated accordingly. It is not good to see one more than the other. Education is carried out regularly first in the family, in kindergarten, then in school, by the public. One of the important features of education is its continuous conduct. Sometimes, after seeing the second child, mothers say that the older one is making a fuss. To prevent this, it is necessary to tell the first-born that he has a brother or sister, and to explain that he has to help in raising his younger brother, and in this case, we are told by our grandparents. magic helps a lot.

CONCLUSION

In education, each child needs special treatment, attitude, and attention. "He's a boy, he'll be a boy", "he'll grow up, he'll find sustenance", "he'll learn everything on his own" and raise a child from birth to adulthood. It is not appropriate to ban things that are a natural need of the child, the child's rapidly growing body needs to be active. The child stubbornly does not listen, cries and is nervous. Later, if a reserved, shy child is treated rudely, he becomes very timid and has difficulty living independently in life.

The family is a center of education that ensures the eternity of life, continuity of generations, preserves our sacred traditions, and at the same time, directly influences the future generations to become human beings. In the East, the family has been considered a sacred homeland since ancient times. If the family is healthy and strong, peace and harmony will be achieved in the neighborhood. Therefore, peace and stability prevail in the state only when the community is strong. After all, family well-being is the basis of national well-being. When talking about the historical roots of the concept of family, first of all, all human qualities such as honesty, truthfulness, honor, shame and modesty, kindness and hard work are formed in the family.

Every family works according to the national values of the whole society, and our grandparents will certainly help us in this. In short, in the place of the conclusion, I would like to say that in families where grandfathers and grandmothers are involved in the upbringing of children, children are exemplary, educated, far-seeing, show respect for the nation, and do not spare all their knowledge and potential for the development of their homeland by loving it wholeheartedly, matures into a person who can be an example to everyone.
